

From the Experts Educator Reflection

Paul Forbes

- Paul Forbes says that he sees his students, "not as they are, but as they will be." Do you view your students in a similar fashion? Why or why not?
- Why would he make a distinction between his students now and what he expects they will become in the future?
- Think about your current students, particularly students of color or students of risk. In what ways are they well prepared for the future? In what ways are they lacking social emotional skills? What ideas do you have? How can you advocate for change?
