

From the Experts Parent Reflection

Paul Forbes

- Paul Forbes discusses the optimistic future for his students, particularly students of color. When you think about the future of your child, do you share Mr. Forbes' optimism? Why or why not?
- How well do you believe your child's school develops leaders? If you are concerned about this, what opportunities are available at your child's school to advocate for change?
- Are you concerned about your child's ability to compete for employment and opportunities once they have completed high school? A high school diploma is generally not adequate enough to prepare young people for employment. What are you doing to support your child to prepare for additional education beyond high school (credential programs, two-year college and/or four-year college)?
- How do you discuss with your child leadership and making good vocational choices?